Share: the county's share of the 2024 statewide vote. 2024: the Harris–Trump margin there. To tie: what the Democratic side needs there for an even state, from our forecast's county pattern. Bellwether: the county nearest the state's 2024 margin. Swing: the biggest move from 2020 to 2024. In by: when the county had passed 90% of its final count in 2024: an hour of election night (ET), a later day (Wed, Thu, Fri, Nov 11, Nov 15), later (after Nov 15) or n/a (the feed had no data). Early, late (where sourced): in 2024, early means the county was 90% in by 9 PM ET and late means it was not yet 90% in at 11 PM ET; both come from the same table as In by. Count by hour: the share of the state's final count in at each hour in 2024; Wed 9 PM, Fri 9 AM and Nov 15 use the last archived copy before that time. 2024 was a presidential year: 2026 can differ. Write the real margin in the box once a county is fully counted.

How to read the night

A count is the order the precincts report, not the result. Three things to check before you trust a lead.

1. A count is not a lead

A candidate who trails by L points with a share c of the vote counted needs the rest of the vote to favor them by $L \times c \div (1 - c)$ points. The more is counted, the harder the catch-up: with half in, the rest must swing as far as the gap; with nine in ten in, nine times as far.

So ask which votes are left (which counties, mail or Election Day) before you read a trend. The county tables show where they are.

COUNTED	THE REST MUST FAVOR THE TRAILER BY
25%	$0.33 \times$ the gap
50%	$1 \times$ the gap
75%	$3 \times$ the gap
90%	$9 \times$ the gap

2. Which votes come first, and which come last

How fast each state counted, hour by hour in 2024, is on the next page. What AP and MIT reported about earlier elections (2020 and 2022, as dated; sources on the web page):

Later votes leaned, the last time

Democratic	Michigan (2020), Wisconsin (2020), Nevada (2022)
Republican	Georgia (2022), North Carolina (2022), Ohio (2022), Florida
Counted late	Rhode Island (mail counted late); Michigan (mail counted late; big cities report late); Wisconsin (mail counted late; big cities report late); Nevada (mail counted late; big cities report late); Oregon (mail counted late); Alaska (mail counted late)

3. Rules that can change the night

Georgia	A candidate needs more than half the vote (50 percent plus one). Otherwise the top two finishers go to a runoff on December 1, 2026. Source: Georgia.gov: Election Day, General Election Runoff; Georgia.gov: Vote in Runoff Elections. Read 2026-10-31.
Maine	Election night shows first choices only. If no candidate has more than 50% of them, ranked-choice rounds are run later in Augusta; the state says a statewide tabulation can take about 1.5 to 2 weeks. Official results come up to 20 days after the election. Source: Maine Secretary of State: How does the RCV tabulation process work?; Maine Secretary of State: Ranked Choice Voting Resources (updated Oct. 6, 2026). Read 2026-10-31.
Florida	If unofficial returns show a candidate or a measure losing by one-half of one percent or less, a recount is ordered (the candidate may ask in writing that it not be made). Source: 2026 Florida Statutes, s. 102.141(7). Read 2026-10-31.

To tie is each county's expected margin if the state ends exactly even, taken from the county-by-county pattern in our own forecast and weighted by 2024 turnout; where we have no pattern for a race, the table says it moves every county by the same amount instead. Real counties will not hit them exactly: use them to see which counties matter, and by roughly how much. Links to every source: callthemap.com/election-night-guide.

How fast each state counts

How much of each state's final presidential count was in at each hour of election night 2024. Fastest first, by the hour each state passed 90%.

From AP's count as archived (sources on the web page). Bold: 90% or more. n/a: no reliable figure (AP's feed had no data for a large county overnight). -: no archived copy for that time. 2024 was a presidential year with more early and mail voting than a midterm, so 2026 can differ. Wed 9 PM, Fri 9 AM and Nov 15 use the last archived copy before that time, so a share may be a little higher by then. Each figure is a share of the state's own final count, not a vote total.
